Jim Crow and Plessy v. Ferguson

Tuesday, November 24
Chapter 12: Struggle for Reform

AIM: How did Jim Crow laws and the Plessy v. Ferguson decision build segregation after Reconstruction?

DO NOW

Think of a rule that treats one group of people differently from another. Is it fair? Why or why not?

Reconstruction	the years from 1865 to 1877 when the nation rebuilt after the Civil War and formerly enslaved people gained new rights
segregation	keeping people apart because of their race
Jim Crow laws	state and local laws that segregated African Americans and white Americans
civil rights	the rights every citizen should have under the Constitution and the law
"separate but equal"	the idea that segregation was legal if the separate places were equal

Timeline of segregation laws in this lesson

READING: Separate and Not Equal

Reconstruction ended in 1877, when the last federal troops left the South. Without that protection, southern states and cities passed Jim Crow laws. These laws segregated schools, trains, streetcars, theaters, restaurants, parks, and even water fountains. African Americans and white Americans could not sit together, eat together, or use the same restrooms. Segregation spread to other parts of the country too, through local laws and customs.

In 1890, Louisiana passed a law that required separate railroad cars for Black and white passengers. A group of citizens in New Orleans decided to challenge the law in court. On June 7, 1892, Homer Plessy, a man the law counted as Black, sat in a whites-only car on purpose. He was arrested, just as the group planned, so the case could go to court.

In 1896, in Plessy v. Ferguson, the Supreme Court ruled 7 to 1 that the law was allowed. The Court said segregation was legal if the separate places were equal. This became known as "separate but equal." Justice John Marshall Harlan disagreed. He wrote: "...in the eye of the law, there is in this country no superior, dominant, ruling class of citizens." In real life, the places set aside for African Americans were almost never equal. Their schools often had less money, fewer books, and older buildings. The Supreme Court did not reject "separate but equal" in public schools until Brown v. Board of Education in 1954.

QUESTIONS

1. What happened in the South after Reconstruction ended in 1877?

2. What did the Supreme Court decide in Plessy v. Ferguson (1896)?

A. Segregation was against the Constitution.

B. Segregation was legal if the places were "separate but equal."

C. Railroads had to let all passengers sit anywhere.

D. Louisiana had to repeal its railroad law.

3. Why did Homer Plessy sit in the whites-only car on purpose?

4. In your own words, what did Justice Harlan mean?

READING: Two Leaders and a Great Move

Low wages, unfair laws, and violence in the South pushed many African Americans to leave. Factory jobs in northern cities such as New York, Chicago, Detroit, and Philadelphia pulled them north. Between about 1916 and 1970, about 6 million African Americans moved. This is called the Great Migration. Newspapers such as the Chicago Defender, founded by Robert S. Abbott in 1905, told readers about jobs in the North. Still, the North had prejudice and segregated neighborhoods too.

Booker T. Washington was born enslaved in Virginia in 1856. He studied at Hampton Institute in Virginia and in 1881 founded the Tuskegee Institute in Alabama, a school that taught job skills and academic subjects. Washington believed African Americans should first gain education and useful skills and build businesses. He thought that would lead, step by step, to equal rights.

W.E.B. Du Bois was born free in Massachusetts in 1868. In 1895, he became the first African American to earn a doctorate (the highest college degree) from Harvard University. Du Bois disagreed with Washington. He said African Americans should demand full civil rights and an equal education now, not later. In 1909, he helped found the NAACP, a group that fought for equal rights. Both men believed education was the key to success.

QUESTIONS

1. About how many African Americans moved north and west in the Great Migration?
   A. about 600,000 B. about 1 million C. about 6 million D. about 60 million

Chapter 12: Struggle for Reform

AIM: How did poll taxes, literacy tests, and grandfather clauses keep African Americans from voting?

DO NOW

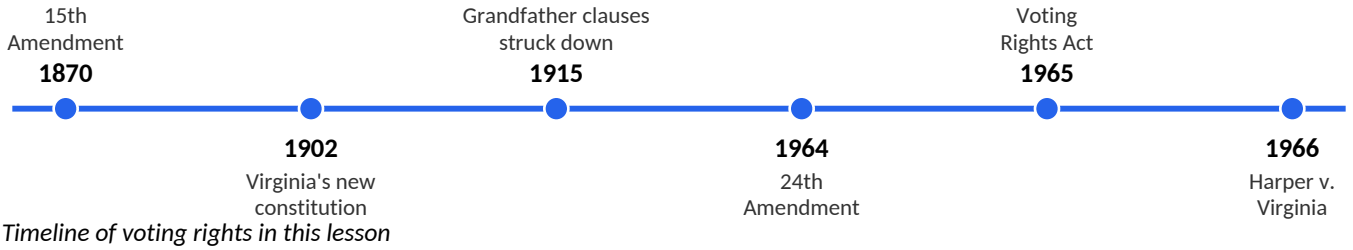

Imagine you had to pay money every year to vote. Who might not be able to vote? Why?

disfranchise	to take away a person's right to vote
poll tax	a fee a person had to pay in order to vote
literacy test	a reading or "understanding" test given before a person could register to vote grandfather clause	a rule that excused a man from voting tests if his father or grandfather could vote before 1867
Fifteenth Amendment	the 1870 amendment that says the right to vote cannot be denied because of race

Timeline of voting rights in this lesson

READING: Rules Made to Keep People Out

The Fifteenth Amendment (1870) says no citizen can be denied the right to vote because of race. After Reconstruction, southern states found other ways to stop African Americans from voting. The rules did not mention race, but they were written and used to keep Black voters out. This is called disfranchisement.

In 1902, Virginia adopted a new state constitution. Its leaders did not let the voters approve it; they put it into effect themselves. It created a poll tax of $1.50 a year. A voter had to pay it six months before an election, and pay it for the past three years too. That was a lot of money for poor farmers and workers. For a time, it also let officials make a person explain any part of the state constitution before registering. Officials judged these tests unfairly. Many poor white Virginians also lost the vote. In the 1905 election for governor, about 88,000 fewer ballots were cast than in 1901.

Some states also used grandfather clauses. A man did not have to pass the tests if his father or grandfather could vote before 1867. Almost no African American men could meet this rule, because their grandfathers had been enslaved and could not vote. Virginia excused Civil War veterans and their sons. In 1915, the Supreme Court struck down grandfather clauses in Guinn v. United States. Poll taxes lasted longer. The Twenty-fourth Amendment (1964) ended poll taxes in federal elections. In 1966, in a Virginia case, Harper v. Virginia State Board of Elections, the Supreme Court ended poll taxes in state elections too. The Voting Rights Act of 1965 stopped literacy tests in Virginia and other states that had used them to keep people from voting.

QUESTIONS

1. What does the Fifteenth Amendment say?

2. Why did a poll tax keep many people from voting?

3. Which Supreme Court case ended poll taxes in state elections?

A. Plessy v. Ferguson
B. Guinn v. United States
C. Harper v. Virginia State Board of Elections
D. Brown v. Board of Education

ACTIVITY: How the Rule Worked

For each rule, write what it required and who it really kept from voting.

Redlining

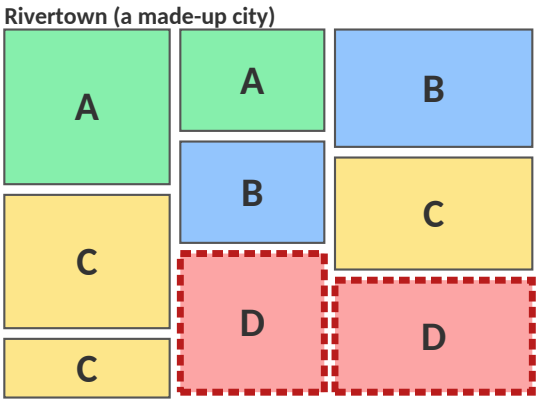

Wednesday, December 2
Chapter 12: Struggle for Reform

AIM: How did redlining and housing discrimination limit where African Americans could live and build wealth?

DO NOW

Why do most families need a loan to buy a house? What could happen if a bank refused to lend to a family?

mortgage	a loan used to buy a home, paid back over many years
redlining	refusing loans in neighborhoods marked as "risky," often because African Americans lived there restrictive covenant	a rule in a home's papers that said it could not be sold to certain groups
wealth	the value of what a family owns, such as a home

READING: Lines on a Map

During the Great Depression, many families were losing their homes. In 1933, the federal government created the Home Owners' Loan Corporation (HOLC) to help. From 1935 to 1940, the HOLC made maps of more than 200 cities. The maps graded each neighborhood from A to D. A (green) was called "best." D was called "hazardous" and was outlined in red. Neighborhoods where African Americans lived were often graded D mainly because of who lived there. Marking an area in red as too risky for loans is called redlining.

Banks and the federal government used ratings like these to decide who could get a home loan. Families in red areas often could not borrow money to buy or fix up a home. In Richmond, Jackson Ward, a busy African American neighborhood with many Black-owned businesses, was graded D. Many homes also had restrictive covenants that said they could not be sold to African Americans. In 1948, the Supreme Court ruled in Shelley v. Kraemer that courts could not enforce these covenants. The Fair Housing Act of 1968 made discrimination in selling or renting homes against the law. For many families, a home is their biggest source of wealth, so redlining had effects that lasted for generations.

QUESTIONS

1. Look at the map. Which grade was outlined in red?

A. A B. B C. C D. D

2. Why were many African American neighborhoods graded D?

Timeline of events in this lesson

READING: Fear Used as a Weapon

After the Civil War, groups such as the Ku Klux Klan, formed in Tennessee in 1866, used threats and violence to frighten African Americans. They tried to stop Black citizens from voting, owning land, going to school, and speaking up. Congress passed laws in 1870 and 1871 to stop these attacks, but after Reconstruction ended, the laws were rarely enforced.

One terrible form of violence was lynching, a murder by a mob without a trial. The Tuskegee Institute kept records starting in 1882. It counted 4,743 people lynched in the United States from 1882 to 1968; 3,446 of them were African Americans. The people who did this were almost never punished. In 1898, in Wilmington, North Carolina, an armed white mob killed Black residents, forced out the city's elected leaders, who included Black officials, and took over the city government.

African Americans and their allies responded in many ways. Some moved north and west. Some wrote and published the facts, like the journalist Ida B. Wells-Barnett. Some formed groups such as the NAACP (1909) to work for new laws and win court cases. For decades, Congress did not pass a law that made lynching a federal crime. A federal anti-lynching law was finally passed in 2022.

QUESTIONS

1. What did groups like the Ku Klux Klan try to stop African Americans from doing? Name two things.

2. What is a lynching?

A. a fair trial
B. a murder by a mob, without a trial
C. a kind of protest march
D. a law passed by Congress

3. What happened in Wilmington, North Carolina, in 1898?

Timeline of Ida B. Wells-Barnett's life

READING: Turning the Light of Truth On

Ida B. Wells was born enslaved in Holly Springs, Mississippi, in 1862, and was freed as a young child. When she was 16, her parents died, and she became a teacher to support her younger brothers and sisters. In 1884, on a train in Tennessee, she refused to give up her seat in the ladies' car and move to a car for Black passengers. She was forced off the train. She sued the railroad and won at first, but the Tennessee Supreme Court overturned the decision in 1887.

Wells became a journalist and part owner of a Memphis newspaper. In 1892, three of her friends, who owned a successful grocery store, were lynched by a mob. Wells decided to investigate. She studied hundreds of cases, using newspaper reports and interviews, and found that the reasons mobs gave were often false. Many victims had done nothing more than succeed in business or stand up for themselves. She published her findings in pamphlets such as Southern Horrors (1892) and A Red Record (1895). While she was away, a mob destroyed her newspaper's office, so she moved north.

Wells, who married Ferdinand Barnett in 1895, gave speeches across the United States and in Great Britain. She helped found the NAACP in 1909, and in 1913 she started the Alpha Suffrage Club in Chicago to help African American women win the vote. In 2020, she was honored with a special Pulitzer Prize citation for her reporting.

QUESTIONS

1. What did Ida B. Wells do on a train in 1884?

2. How did Wells find out the truth about lynching?

A. She guessed.

B. She studied hundreds of cases using newspaper reports and interviews.

C. She asked the mobs.

D. She read a textbook.

3. Name one other cause Wells worked for besides ending lynching.

READING: Built to Last

In 1908, a white mob attacked African Americans in Springfield, Illinois, Abraham Lincoln's hometown. Many people were shocked. In 1909, a group of Black and white reformers came together to fight for equal rights. They included W.E.B. Du Bois, Ida B. Wells-Barnett, Mary White Ovington, and Mary Church Terrell. They formed the NAACP. Du Bois edited its magazine, The Crisis. The NAACP used lawsuits to fight unfair laws. It helped win Guinn v. United States (1915), which struck down grandfather clauses. Later, NAACP lawyers such as Thurgood Marshall won Brown v. Board of Education (1954).

For many years, most colleges would not admit African American students. So African Americans and their allies built their own colleges, now called HBCUs. In Virginia, Virginia Union University was founded in Richmond in 1865, and Hampton Institute (now Hampton University) in 1868; Booker T. Washington studied there. Virginia State University opened in Petersburg in 1882 as the nation's first fully state-supported four-year college for Black students. Other HBCUs include Howard University (1867) and Tuskegee Institute (1881).

African Americans also built businesses. In Richmond, Maggie L. Walker founded the St. Luke Penny Savings Bank in 1903. She was the first African American woman to charter a bank in the United States. Her bank helped Black families save money and buy homes when other banks would not help them. Richmond's Jackson Ward became a center of Black-owned businesses.

QUESTIONS

1. What event in 1908 helped lead to the founding of the NAACP?

2. How did the NAACP fight unfair laws?

Timeline of women's suffrage

READING: Votes for Women

By 1900, about 4 million women worked in jobs other than farming, in factories, offices, and stores. Yet women could not vote in most states. In 1848, Elizabeth Cady Stanton and Lucretia Mott led a meeting in Seneca Falls, New York, that called for women's right to vote. Susan B. Anthony was arrested in 1872 for voting. In 1869, Wyoming Territory became the first territory or state to give women the full right to vote. Suffragists such as Carrie Chapman Catt led a national group, and Alice Paul organized a large march in Washington, D.C., in 1913. In 1917, suffragists picketed, or protested, outside the White House, and some were jailed.

African American women such as Ida B. Wells-Barnett and Mary Church Terrell fought for the vote too, even when some white suffragists left them out. In Virginia, Lila Meade Valentine led the Equal Suffrage League of Virginia, founded in 1909. In August 1920, Tennessee became the 36th state to ratify the Nineteenth Amendment, and it became law. Virginia's legislature voted against it in 1920 and did not ratify it until 1952. In Richmond, Maggie L. Walker helped African American women register to vote in 1920, but in the South, poll taxes and unfair tests kept many Black women from voting for years.

1. What did the Nineteenth Amendment do?

2. Which state was the 36th to ratify it in 1920?

READING: A Ban That Did Not Last

Many reformers believed alcohol caused serious problems: families lost wages, workers got hurt, and some homes became unsafe. The temperance movement worked to limit or end drinking. Women led much of this work. In 1874, women formed the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, later led by Frances Willard. The Anti-Saloon League, founded in 1893, pushed states to pass laws against alcohol.

Virginia voters approved a statewide ban in 1914, and it took effect on November 1, 1916. The Eighteenth Amendment, ratified in 1919, banned making, selling, and transporting alcohol across the country starting in 1920. This period is called Prohibition. But many people broke the law. Illegal bars and smugglers sold alcohol, and crime groups grew rich. The Twenty-first Amendment repealed Prohibition in 1933. It is the only amendment that cancels another amendment.

Writing for change. Reformers also used writing to push for change. W.E.B. Du Bois wrote The Souls of Black Folk (1903) and edited The Crisis, the NAACP's magazine, for many years. His words helped many Americans see that equal rights were needed.
